Environmental Hazards

Computer monitors, televisions, and all other electronic devices contain a wide concoction of heavy metals. These include mercury, lead, cadmium, arsenic, chromium, and more. All of these materials are hazardous to the environment and human health!

One computer monitor or portable television can contain up to EIGHT POUNDS of lead. The need to protect ourselves is growing with every computer screen, television, and other electronic device discarded.

Businesses need to know that every device that contains a printed circuit board is considered an electronic device, and must be recycled.

Residential users need to know that state law requires all TVs and computer monitors to be recycled, including laptops.

PLEASE RECYCLE YOUR ELECTRONICS!
